Fighter jets to buzz area in Games exercise

SECURITY Canadian Forces CF-18 Hornets will be buzzing through the skies of the Lower Mainland this week as part of Olympic security preparations.

The exercise will familiarize the fighter-jet pilots with the area they will be working once the Olympic airspace restrictions take effect.

Family awaits daughters

Adopted Haitian siblings set to be arriving in Canada soon

Haiti Crisis

An Abbotsford family was awaiting word on their two adopted daughters yesterday, the same day that a plane carrying the first Haitian orphans arrived in Ottawa.

Nancy and Mark Custodio of Abbotsford are in the process of adopting two sisters, Emerline, 5, and Judeline, 3, from Haiti.

"They're beautiful," Nancy Custodio said.

Judeline likes music, while Emerline, who has lots of energy, loves "girly stuff" like doing her nails and hair.

The girls have photo albums of their new family and call their new parents "Mamma" and "Papa."

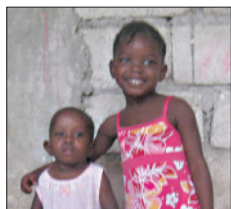

They were living in an orphanage in the southern city of Jacmel, south of the capital Port-au-Prince, when the devastating magnitude-7.0 earthquake struck.

The girls have since moved outside because of structural damage to the building.

"We just basically wait," said Custodio. "It's really tough. God keeps us strong.

We have to be tough for our girls."

Twenty-four orphaned Haitian children arrived in Ottawa yesterday, leaving the Air Canada plane wrapped in blue blankets to protect them from the cold.

On Friday, Citizenship and Immigration Canada announced an agreement with Haiti to evacuate 154 children who were in the advanced stage of the adoption process to Canada.

The Custodios, who are 15 months into their adoptions, have been filling their home with Haitian art and books and are learning Creole to keep alive their daughters' culture within their household.

"We want them to know how very much we want them and how much we love them. We are not going to stop until they are home."

Heads of state keep VANOC in suspense

VANCOUVER

2010 Games

OPENING CEREMONIES U.S. President Barack Obama is not expected at the opening ceremonies for the 2010 Winter Olympics, but that doesn't mean he isn't coming at all.

An official announcement from the White House may come as early as next week regarding the American delegation to the Games.

Obama, for example, could still come to watch a high-profile American athlete compete, like Lindsay Vonn, who is dominating the World Cup ski circuit.

It's expected that Vice-President Joe Biden will be named as the U.S. government's official face at the lavish Feb. 12 event.

Taleeb Noormohamed, vice-president of national and international partnerships for VANOC, said somewhere between 25 and 35 heads of state, kings, queens and high-level government representatives are expected at the opening ceremonies. Most have not RSVP'd yet.

Canada's official presence will come from Gov. Gen. Michaëlle Jean, who will open the Games in her capacity as the Queen's representative in Canada.

Her presence means that the Queen of England will not attend, but Prince Charles or his sons William and Harry may still come to Vancouver. So far, Canadian Heritage is staying mum on their possible visit.

Slim chance of snow at Cypress Mountain

WEATHER There's a chance of snow — albeit slim — at the top of Cypress Mountain, which has bare and muddy patches with just 18 days to go until the opening ceremonies.

According to Environment Canada meteorologist Greg Pearce, there's moisture coming to the beleaguered Olympic venue on the North Shore, which could mean as much as 10 to 15 centimetres of snow in the best-case scenario.

"It's liable to be quite wet and sloppy (at the base of the mountain) and (snow) might melt off," said Pearce.

And it won't be quite cool enough to make snow. The freezing level won't drop below 900 metres this week and is forecast to be as high 1,200 metres on Thursday.

Black Mountain, which is part of the Cypress Bowl where Olympic snowboarding and freestyle skiing are taking place, peaks at 1,200 metres.

For VANOC, this means sticking to the plan to have helicopters, trucks and snowcats move snow to the Olympic runs.

Drivers answer call

Niagara Falls women to steer buses during Games

VANCOUVER

2010 Games

Transit operators from across Canada have been recruited to British Columbia to drive Olympic bus routes during February.

Among those taking a working holiday of Olympic proportions are Niagara Falls, Ont., bus drivers Sandra McCloy and friend Margaret Gilbert.

They both work for public-transport agency Niagara Falls Transit and are flying to the West Coast this week to begin a month-long stint of driving buses in the Whistler area as part of the Vancouver Winter Games.

Both women have been hired by PW Transit (Whistler), which has been contracted by B.C. Transit to operate transportation services for the Whistler portion of the Olympics. In addition to drivers, PW Transit has also recruited dispatchers, mechanics, supervisors and service personnel to keep people moving in the area.

Both women were granted a leave of absence from their employer to be part of the February event. In addition to showing proof of their driver qualifications, both agreed to a security background check.

McCloy said that her background in driving sightseers around in tourism-heavy Niagara Falls should prepare her for the international traffic about to descend upon Whistler Village and the outlying Sea-to-Sky corridor.

"We end up meeting a lot of tourists down here, and you end up having a lot of conversations with people from everywhere," she said from her Niagara Falls home, where she was reached by Metro.

"It's going to be neat. You figure how many people from around the world will be at the Olympics. And everybody talks to a bus driver."

McCloy said she's not concerned about winter storms or other challenging weather hitting the region and making driving difficult during the Games.

"Even driving on regular city streets, you never know what you are going to run into," she said. "If you wake up and there's a storm, you still have to go to work."

Skaters' dance routine causes stir

OLYMPICS An aboriginal-themed routine by two Russian ice dancers has stirred up a pre-Olympic controversy, with some indigenous Australians blasting the "rip off" of their culture and British Columbia native leaders worrying about the insensitivity of the skaters.

World champions Oksana Domnina and Maxim Shabalin are doing an aboriginal routine for their original dance — complete with brown-toned costumes adorned with leaves and white aboriginal-style markings.

"It's appalling," said Bev Manton, chairperson of the Aboriginal Land Council in New South Wales state. "They could have provided more respect to our culture by doing more research."

Domnina, who won the European dance title with Shabalin last week, has said that they researched their dance by watching online videos of aboriginal dances.

The Russians unveiled the routine at last month's Russian nationals, and plan to use it again at the Vancouver Olympics, which has worried Canada's indigenous leaders.

Tewanee Joseph, CEO of the Four Host First Nations, said he would like to meet with the Russian pair ahead of the Olympics.

"I'm just drafting a letter to the Russian couple, and we want to host them and welcome them into our territory, and also help educate them on our protocols when they come in to compete in Vancouver," Joseph said.

Hundreds rally against prorogation of Parliament

PROTEST Hundreds of people in Vancouver attended a rally demanding Prime Minister Stephen Harper reopen Parliament and get back to work.

Grassroots organizers passed out hand-painted signs and buttons to more than 600 people who bopped to the beat of a funk band playing next to the Olympic countdown clock before marching through the city.

Kathleen Glynn-Morris said she's embarrassed by a government that seems to be using the upcoming Games as an excuse.

"I think it's nonsense. They're public servants. We pay for them to do a job," she said. "The rest of us can't say 'Oh well, now the Olympics are here — people aren't interested in our job, what we're doing.'"

Rallies were also held in various other cities across Canada, including Toronto, Ottawa and Edmonton.

Harper responded that the government is urgently trying to craft an agenda for the March 3 resumption of Parliament while dealing with the "life and death issues" of the Haiti earthquake.

Nine months after Ottawa promised to expedite immigration applications from those Afghans, the new bureaucratic maze they have to navigate has barely sputtered into existence.

While Ottawa promised an expedited process, the program seems to be anything but straightforward.

Applicants must first fill out a form and hand it along with supporting documentation to a third party in Kandahar city — the International Organization for Migration, an intergovernmental agency.

The organization then passes approved applications to a "joint referral committee," comprising senior Canadian military and civilian officials at Kandahar Airfield. The committee does not yet exist.

Rare trial begins for Canadian soldier

AFGHANISTAN A Canadian soldier will face a court martial today, accused of the 2008 murder of a wounded, unarmed Taliban fighter in southern Afghanistan — a case a military expert says is almost certainly the first of its kind.

Capt. Robert Semrau has been charged with second-degree murder in the battlefield killing of an insurgent fighter following a prolonged clash in Lashkar Gah, the capital of Helmand province.

The series of running firefights took place as British and Afghan forces along with their Canadian mentors helped defend the city in October 2008. But Semrau wasn't charged until the alleged killing came to the attention of Canadian commanders two months later.

Michel Drapeau, a retired colonel and lawyer, said he hasn't been able to find a case of this kind in Canadian military legal history, where a soldier was tried for the battlefield murder of a prisoner.

"It's unprecedented in many, many respects," said Drapeau.

"I can't remember any such incidents in the past 50 years and in the Second World War, I don't believe there was such a court martial. From my own memory and recollection, there hasn't been such a case."

Capt. Robert Semrau

A joint "synopsis" of the Afghan incident, filed in court last year, states Semrau was mentoring an Afghan National Army unit under British command when they were ambushed in the Nad Ali district.

A U.S. Apache helicopter was called in and sprayed the area with cannon fire. When the Afghans and Canadians swept the district afterward, they discovered one dead insurgent and another with wounds "too severe for any type of treatment" in the field.

The document says an assault rifle was taken from the wounded man before Semrau was allegedly seen firing his rifle at him. Two shots were heard.

"When I saw the children coming off, I felt so relieved

On the way to her new country, though Dakemsia was intently watching an in-flight movie, she said she was looking forward to being in Ca-NAH-da.

Immigration Minister Jason Kenney said officials were expecting upwards of 50 kids on the flight, but there were logistical and orphanage staff problems on the ground in Haiti.

He said the government hopes to have the vast majority of children in Canada within a few days.

Driver complacency not an option

InTransit

Derek Moscato

dmoscato@yahoo.com

As far as North American-staged Olympics go, the Salt Lake City Winter Games represent a tough act to follow. The Utah capital overcame significant scandal leading up to the event to put on a memorable, financially successful Olympics. The city even found a way to ward off traffic chaos by deploying a well-executed transportation plan.

Drivers heeded the advice of Games' organizers during 2002 and stayed away from the city centre or kept their cars at home and took transit. However — and this is something that has been noted by Vancouver's planners — complacency did set in eventually, and drivers began using their vehicles more freely — leading to some unwanted congestion at the conclusion of those Games.

A study from the Salt Lake City transportation division has demonstrated the keys to achieving the overall traffic success during the 2002 Winter Games. Those factors were co-ordination and co-operation between agencies, detailed planning, modelling and testing, plus loads of public information and travel demand management.

Last year, researchers from Beijing Jiaotong University published a paper focused on the impacts of traffic measures during the Beijing Summer Olympics, comparing pre- and post-Games traffic. Their assessment showed that so-called traffic control measures reduced traffic anywhere between 15 and 35 per cent. In other words, their plan also worked.

While Beijing is not as useful a comparison as Salt Lake City, its traffic success shows Olympics transport can be managed. So there's hope for Vancouver.

Local drivers might even be lulled into thinking that this time it will be easier — that they can drive freely about en route to work or pleasure. But complacency cannot be an option during these Games.

Salt Lake City had only five Games venues within a nine-kilometre radius of its city centre. Vancouver, by comparison, will have 10. And Salt Lake City has a smaller population and a less congested road and transit network.

Cognizant of this, TransLink and VANOC have created the Transportation

Centre, which will allow regional transport agencies to deal with real-time traffic situations. Norm Fraser, TransLink's Olympic transportation operations manager, has dubbed it "road-based intelligence gathering."

Before hitting the road this February, local car enthusiasts would be wise to take their own travel plans this seriously.

Watch out for Most Hell Bent On Skates

Anne Hines

For the past three days I found myself in the grip of a second horrible, nasty flu since fall. I'm calling this one H2N2.

The last time, I suggested fellow sufferers plant yourselves on the couch and become flu divas for a day. The problem with trying this again in a three-month period is: a) everyone still remembers how much trouble you were last time; and b) well, that's it really.

I am happy to report though that my partner, Liz, is doing everything possible to help me recover by Saturday. The reason: Liz loves two things. Me. And hockey. I'm pretty sure in that order. Once a year she gets to have both together when her hockey league hosts its annual charity event, The Wives Game.

The Wives Game is played by the spouses, partners and friends of the regular woman players. You don't have to be a wife to play. You don't even have to be female. The only criteria is you can't have any discernible knowledge of, ability in, or talent for playing hockey. If you can't skate either, so much the better.

Last year, our male goalie had to be helped to the net by his girlfriend and propped into position, where, I'm delighted to say, he ended with a shutout. Sometimes, players refuse to come out for their turn, preferring to sit on the bench and chat, one woman saying, "What's the point? We can't score to save our lives."

Friends and partners of the players ante up $10 each to enter us, then sit on the sidelines and call out supportive things such as, "You going to lie there all night?" Some of us have dubbed the event "Mocking for Money."

Funds raised go to Gilda's Club, a fine organization providing care for cancer patients, making it all worthwhile. And playing hockey lets out a part of me that sits on the sidelines for the rest of the year. Twice I've taken home the trophy for "Most Hell Bent On Skates." And if my temperature goes below 101 come Saturday night, I'm looking for No. 3.

Canadian among 90 feared dead in plane crash

LEBANON An Ethiopian Airlines plane with 90 people on board crashed into the sea early yesterday just minutes after takeoff from Beirut, the transportation minister said.

The cause was not immediately known. But police ruled out terrorism and said the crash was likely weather-related. It had been raining heavily and lightning in Beirut yesterday. The Boeing 737-800 was bound for the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa, said Ghazi Aridi, the public works and transportation minister.

"The weather undoubtedly was very bad," Aridi told reporters at the airport. He added that the plane went down about four kilometres off the Lebanese coast.

The plane was carrying 90 people, including 83 passengers and 7 crew. Aridi identified the passengers as 54 Lebanese, 22 Ethiopians, one Canadian of Lebanese origin, one Iraqi, one Syrian, one Russian of Lebanese origin, a French woman and two Britons of Lebanese origin.

What you need to know about AddFare

$5 Canada Line levy in effect for trips beyond Sea Island from Vancouver's airport

If you will be using the Canada Line to travel from Vancouver International Airport (YVR) to Bridgeport Station and beyond, you need to know about the Canada Line YVR AddFare that is now in effect.

Q Where does the Canada Line YVR AddFare apply and how much does it cost?

A The Canada Line YVR AddFare is applicable to inbound travel departing from any of the stations on Sea Island (YVR-Airport, Sea Island Centre and Templeton) destined for Bridgeport Station or points beyond. The Canada Line YVR AddFare is $5 in addition to your zone fare.

Q Who pays the new Canada Line YVR AddFare?

A Canada Line customers travelling from YVR-Airport, Sea Island Centre and Templeton stations to Bridgeport Station or beyond, who buy their fare zone ticket from a Ticket Vending Machine using cash, debit card or credit card, must pay the $5 Canada Line YVR AddFare. This includes concession (seniors and students) fares. Children under the age of five can ride transit for free and are not subject to the YVR AddFare.

Q Is there a form of payment that is exempt from the Canada Line YVR AddFare?

A Customers who use prepaid fares such as DayPasses, Monthly FareCards, FareSaver tickets, West Coast Express weekly and 28-day passes, U-Passes, employer passes and government bus passes are exempt from the Canada Line YVR AddFare.

Q Is the Canada Line YVR AddFare separate from a regular AddFare?

A Yes. A regular AddFare is an upgrade to the number of fare zones that you will be travelling. The Canada Line YVR AddFare applies only to travel departing from a Sea Island station (YVR-Airport, Sea Island Centre, Templeton) to Bridgeport Station or beyond, and is required in addition to a valid ticket for the applicable number of fare zones.

Q Is it easy to pay the Canada Line YVR AddFare at the ticket vending machines?

A The ticket vending machines (TVMs) at the three Sea Island stations will be adjusted to charge the additional $5 Canada Line YVR AddFare automatically on applicable transactions.

Note: If you are upgrading a FareSaver ticket for additional fare zones at a Sea Island station TVM and you use cash, debit card or credit card to pay the upgrade, you will still be considered as a prepaid customer and you will not have to pay the $5 Canada Line YVR AddFare.

Q Is travel between Sea Island stations still free?

A Yes, Canada Line travel remains free between all three stations on Sea Island.

Q Will Sea Island employees, Burkeville residents and BCIT Aerospace students be exempt from the Canada Line YVR AddFare?

A There is no specific exemption for any employee, resident or student on Sea Island. However transit users with prepaid fares such as DayPasses, Monthly FareCards, FareSaver Tickets, West Coast Express weekly and 28-day passes, U-Passes, employer passes and the government bus pass are exempt from the Canada Line YVR AddFare.

Q Does the Canada Line YVR AddFare apply for travel to the airport?

A You do not have to pay the Canada Line YVR AddFare to travel to YVR. Regular transit fares apply. The Canada Line YVR AddFare applies if you are travelling from YVR to Bridgeport Station or beyond.

Q Where can I purchase prepaid transit tickets at the airport?

A DayPasses and other prepaid tickets can be purchased at any FareDealer location. Prepaid tickets are available for purchase within the airport at the 7-Eleven and Pharmasave in the Domestic Terminal Arrivals Level 1.

Q Who can I contact if I need to find out more about how the Canada Line YVR AddFare works?

A You can call 604-953-3333 to speak with a TransLink customer information representative. Information is also available online at translink.ca.

Q Why is there an additional YVR AddFare on the YVR portion of Canada Line?

A The Canada Line YVR AddFare has been part of TransLink's funding plan since 2004 and goes toward bridging a funding gap in order to make the Canada Line viable. Several measures were approved to close the gap, including an additional amount on trips from Vancouver International Airport.

Q Who will collect revenue from the Canada Line YVR AddFare?

A TransLink is responsible for setting and collecting all transit fares. The Vancouver Airport Authority will not receive any portion of the revenue collected from the AddFare. The Airport Authority has paid for 100 per cent of the costs associated with all portions of the Canada Line on Sea Island, including the three stations.

CLIMATE There was a time when we thought being responsible meant drinking water and recycling the bottle it came in.

But today, a growing mass of evidence is pointing to how harmful the bottled water industry is for the economy and ecology of the modern world. Whether it's the amount of gas it takes to ship the water — the documentary film Tapped estimates that in the U.S. alone, 18 million barrels of oil are used every year to transport bottled water — or the toxins present in the plastic bottles, there is a realization that bottled water puts a serious strain on the environment.

Entrepreneur Benjamin

Boxed water is being encouraged as a replacement for bottled.

Gott sensed the tide was turning on bottled water back in March of 2008, so he came up with a brilliant concept that was previously non-existent in this 16-billion-dollar bottled water industry — boxed water.

The 950 milliliter containers are made from 85 per cent environmentally sustainable materials. Like bottled water brands Dasani and Aquafina, Boxed Water is purified tap water.

Since the containers are collapsible, shipping the cartons greatly reduces the carbon imprint generated from shipping plastic bottles.

Forcing a wake-up call

All eyes on Canada ahead of G8 Summit in June

Eco-Minded

The inspiration to become an environmentalist came at age three, watching a World Wildlife Fund commercial that showed a human hand reaching onto the deck of a wooden Noah's ark and toppling over various animals.

The chilling image is memorable because it is so real: Approximately one-quarter of the world's mammals are at risk of extinction.

The United Nations declared 2010 the International Year of Biodiversity (IYB).

A focal point is the Convention of Biological Diversity — a major international agreement signed by 196 national governments.

The Convention set targets to reduce biodiversity loss by 2010, but precious little has been achieved.

The IYB is a wake-up call to redouble our efforts.

Why?

Because just as the Convention states, biodiversity loss often compromises human well-being. Biodiversity — all forms of life on Earth — is crucial to the provision of many benefits people derive from nature, from food production (including crop pollination and pest control), water provision, and enhancement of recreation.

Canada played a key role in the 1992 signing of the Convention, and it's time for Canadians again to

In the recent climate talks in Copenhagen, Canada was widely seen as a moral defector, a rogue nation.

EI A recent decline in the number of Canadians claiming employment insurance is a positive sign, but represents only a fraction of the challenges facing the Canadian workforce, according to the research director of the Martin Prosperity Institute. According to a Statistics Canada report Friday, the number of Canadians receiving regular EI benefits dropped 7,300 to 795,900 in November from the previous month.

Anticipation builds for Apple tablet

Product rumoured to read newspaper content

Expectations that Apple Inc. will launch its much-rumoured tablet computer Wednesday has Internet blogs buzzing with speculation of how the device will look and what it will be called.

Typically, Apple is continuing with its successful formula of building anticipation through secrecy. The iPod maker sent out a statement last week urging media to "come see our latest creation" at an event in San Francisco Jan. 27, but provided no other details.

One rumour is the New York Times' decision to begin charging for access to

Apple is rumoured to be working with a number of other newspaper and book publishers, and is also reportedly in talks with AT&T and Verizon on a deal that would connect the tablet to their wireless networks.

The Wall Street Journal reported that Apple also wants to offer monthly TV subscriptions on its tablet and is negotiating a deal with CBS Corp. and ABC-owner Walt Disney Co.

The newspaper, quoting an industry insider, said Apple chief executive Steve Jobs is "supportive of the old guard" and "looks to help them by giving them new forms of distribution."

Saints are bound for Super Bowl

NFL RESULTS

Vikings 28 Saints 31 (OT)

They sure ain't the Aints anymore.

The New Orleans Saints are heading to their first Super Bowl after battering Brett Favre and beating the Minnesota Vikings 31-28 in overtime yesterday on unheralded Garrett Hartley's 40-yard field goal.

Favre threw away Minnesota's best chance to win, tossing an interception deep in New Orleans territory in the closing seconds of regulation. Then the Saints won the coin toss and soon it was over.

The team that had no home five years ago after Hurricane Katrina ravaged its city and the Superdome overcame a slew of mistakes in the biggest game the Big Easy has ever seen.

"This is for everybody in this city," said coach Sean Payton, the architect of the Saints' turnaround. "This stadium used to have holes in it and used to be wet. It's not wet anymore. This is for the city of New Orleans."

New Orleans Saints running back Pierre Thomas goes over the middle for a first down during overtime in the NFC Championship game against the Minnesota Vikings yesterday.

Forget the paper bag masks and that long history of losing that started in 1967. Moments after Hartley's kick, they were toasting their hometown winners on Bourbon Street.

And in the Superdome, once a squalid refuge after Katrina, they boogied in the aisles as confetti covered the field.

"It's a moment I've been waiting for a long time and obviously we're not done yet," said Drew Brees, Payton's hand-picked quarterback for the Saints' renaissance.

Manning tosses 3 touchdowns rallying Colts to victory over Jets

NFL RESULTS

Jets 17 Colts 30

NFL This is perfect for the Indianapolis Colts: They have Peyton Manning and they're back in the Super Bowl.

The four-time MVP threw three touchdown passes and the Colts rallied from an 11-point, first-half deficit to beat the New York Jets 30-17 yesterday in the AFC championship game.

The Colts (16-2) are now headed back to the NFL title game for the second time in four years and their fourth Super Bowl in franchise history. Better yet, they're heading back to their lucky city — Miami, where they've played all four of those games and won three times.

"I thought we just kept our mouths shut and went to work this week," Manning said.

ning said.

Manning finished 26-of-39 for 377 yards. He became the first player in league history with seven 300-yard post-season games.

That broke a tie with Kurt Warner and Joe Montana.

The Jets' magical run ended with their first road loss in six games.

New York (11-8) built a 17-6 lead and took advantage of trick plays.

But the Jets lost running back Shonn Greene with a rib injury in the second half, and rookie quarterback Mark Sanchez was shut out over the final two quarters.

The sixth-seeded Williams beat Francesca Schiavone 3-6, 6-2, 6-1 early today, recovering after dropping a set to the Italian for the first time since 2003.

Li upset No. 4-seed Caroline Wozniacki, the U.S. Open finalist, 6-3, 6-2 in a 98-minute match featuring 12 service breaks.

Li held when it counted, saving three break points in an 11-minute opening game.

Skier makes Olympic cut

Third-place finish at World Cup event enough for Dave Duncan

Two of his skicross teammates won gold yesterday, but Dave Duncan still had the biggest smile on the podium.

The native of Golden, B.C., put together his strongest performance of the World Cup season, a third-place finish that propelled him into the final spot on the Canadian Olympic freestyle team. Facing his final Olympic qualifying event, Duncan needed to finish fifth or better to surpass aerialist Olivier Rochon for a berth in Vancouver.

"It had crossed my mind a few times," Duncan joked. "I think I woke up a couple times (Saturday night) just thinking about how the race was going to play out. But I just stuck to the game plan up there, and didn't panic as mistakes were made, and crossed the finish line, and here we are."

Christopher Del Bosco of Sudbury won the men's event, while Kelsey Serwa of Kelowna, B.C., captured the women's race on a cool day at Whiteface Mountain. Del Bosco and Serwa each won their second gold medals of the season; both were awarded gold in Alpe d'Huez, France, two weeks ago after poor weather forced organizers to cancel the finals.

Duncan skied with vigour yesterday, winning his opening heat before edging out teammate Brian Bennett to reach the semis. Needing to advance to the final to secure his Olympic spot, Duncan roared back from last place after a gate malfunction left him scrambling to make up ground from the get-go. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Gold streak ends for Canadian snowboarders

GIANT SLALOM The Canadian hot streak in men's World Cup snowboarding came to an end yesterday on an icy mountain in Stoneham, Que.

A Canuck boarder had won gold in each of the first four parallel giant slalom races to start the season, but a pair of powerful Austrian riders took the top podium spots away from the speedy Canadian team — on home turf, to boot.

World No. 1 Benjamin (Benji) Karl beat Andreas Prommegger to win the gold yesterday. Prommegger took home the silver in an event packed with elite snowboarders.

Veteran Jasey-Jay Anderson of Mont-Tremblant, Que., won the bronze.

Anderson, who has two World Cup victories this season and ranks No. 2 in the world, said the hill's icy conditions gave him trouble.

He considered himself lucky to finish third.

"It was very intense, I felt like I was on a battlefield," said Anderson, 34, who lost to Karl in the semifinals.

Toronto's Michael Lambert took seventh place. Lambert needed a top-five finish to guarantee himself a spot on the Canadian Olympic team, but is still expected to make the squad. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Icemaker who buried loonie feels shortchanged

COIN The man who buried a lucky loonie in the ice during the 2002 Winter Olympics says his memory of the event and his Olympic spirit have been dampened since he was muscled out of the coin tradition by the Royal Canadian Mint.

Trent Evans was an icemaker during the Salt Lake City Games when he stuck a loonie inside the ice that would see both the Canadian men's and women's hockey teams strike gold.

Evans worked with the Mint on promotions for a couple years after the win and says he even had his name and likeness used in a "lucky loonie" design.

But the Edmonton father of two charges the Mint has since pushed him out, refusing to recognize his role in the lucky loonie tradition while cutting down on his involvement in the campaign.

"Big brother, if you will, has kind of taken over the story and done with it what they want to do with it, without including the personal piece of the story, the guy," Evans said in an interview with The Canadian Press.

Mint spokeswoman Christine Aquino says the lucky loonie has evolved in recent years and gone in a new direction, though she wouldn't say if the facility had a falling out with Evans.

The Mint plans to unveil its latest lucky loonie on Feb. 11, one day before the opening ceremonies in Vancouver.

When asked if an olive branch will be extended to Evans, Aquino would say only that plans for the coin's launch are still being finalized.

Evans said he wasn't in it for the money.

"This was never about Trent Evans getting rich," he said.

"This is more about Trent Evans being able to know that my kids' kids will read the story about a loonie for luck some day ... (and know) that I'm the guy." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Every January, a rush of repentant fitness-seekers hits the gym to work off those holiday pounds and start a healthier lifestyle.

Yet inevitably many people fall off the wagon once spring rolls around. The challenge fitness clubs face is to keep people coming in.

Sammie Kennedy, CEO and creator of Booty Camp Fitness which hosts women-

only fitness boot camps at more than 90 locations across Canada, says January is definitely a busy time for drawing new members, but that the goal is to make sure they stick around after the initial rush.

"January is one of our busiest seasons and one of our goals at Booty Camp Fitness is to not let these people become 'January joiners.' We want them to come back and get hooked on fitness," Kennedy said.

Taso Pappas, chief operating officer of Extreme Fitness Canada which operates 13 fitness clubs throughout Toronto, says

"People are starting the year with good intentions, and our challenge is to try and keep them committed."

Extreme Fitness CEO

the last 10 years have seen a strong upsurge in new members right after the holidays. According to Pappas, Extreme Fitness clubs see an average increase of 40 per cent in new member signups during January and February compared to the rest of the year, as well as a 40 per cent higher usage rate among existing members determined to get back on the wagon.

Yet by the time March hits, usage and new member signups drop 25 to 30 per cent again, proving that keeping new members from dropping out after the start-of-year rush is the biggest challenge fitness companies face, Pappas says.

January and February are the busiest months of the year for gyms, but things fall off in the spring.

"People are starting the year with good intentions, and our challenge is to try and keep them committed and convince them the lifestyle change they're making is worthwhile," Pappas said.

Motivation and expert guidance are key for most people: At Extreme, 90 per cent of new members who take on a personal trainer see higher results and stay active in the club for 12 months or longer, while half of those without personal trainers stop working out before the year is up.

Clergy happiest with career: Study

SURVEY SAYS Last year, Jim Rosenthal gave up a 20-year career in PR, to become a priest. Doing so meant taking a 70 per cent pay cut. And as a rookie priest, Rosenthal has to start at the bottom of the ladder.

Even so, he loves his new job in London. "As I walk down the street, many people ignore me, and once a man even spit on me, but usually I get kind looks and people ask me for a blessing", explains Rosenthal. "I try to be an agent of goodwill, and as a priest you have a chance to communicate even better."

Rosenthal isn't the only enthusiastic priest. According to the University of Chicago's survey on job satisfaction, clergy have the highest job satisfaction.

Richard Reid, 31, gave up a comfortable life as a sound engineer at Nickelodeon to become a London firefighter. "I get to put out fires, I get to go to schools and talk about fire safety and lead workshops encouraging minority men to get an education," says Reid. "What else can I ask for? The only thing I can think of is that firefighters deserve to be paid more."

Priests, too, put out fires, albeit different ones. "And like firefighters, we save lives," notes Rosenthal.

When you need to talk to a co-worker about your issues

Often, colleagues don't realize they are creating problems and are willing to make changes, experts say. Explain to your colleague that his or her behaviour is interfering with your ability to do your job and offer an alternative or work out a compromise. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When co-workers get on your nerves ...

It's the chitchat that never seems to end. Or the humming or whistling while you're trying to concentrate. Or the smell of someone's lunch (what IS she eating?), or even a whiff of body odour.

The most irritating or disruptive things about a job may have nothing to do with too much work or boring assignments. Sometimes what gets your goat is the annoying habits of the person at the next desk or cubicle.

What do you do? Put up with it? Complain to your co-worker and maybe start a rift? Complain to the boss and possibly make everything worse?

Management consultants say you should address such issues if they could end up affecting how well you do your job. Here are some tips about the best way to deal with disruptive co-workers: Annoyance or interference

The first step is to figure out whether your co-worker's behaviour is just annoying or if really does interfere with your ability to do your job. You also need to ask yourself, is it really your colleague causing the problem, or is it your attitude?

Some people may be more sensitive or intolerant if they are unhappy in their jobs, under a lot of stress or dealing with personal issues. They may be more prone to find something wrong with a co-worker's behaviour, said Roxanne Emmerich, a workplace management expert who runs The Emmerich Group Inc. in Minneapolis.

"If there is no work problem, then you really need to ask yourself, is this something that I just need to let go," said Atlanta workplace management coach Marie McIntyre, who runs the website yourofficecoach.com.

Quiet, please

Some people need quiet to concentrate while others embrace noise or talking as part of the creative process.

McIntyre said there are physiological differences among people that allow some to screen out co-workers' conversations and other noise. Others, however, hear and notice everything.

"If you're somebody who hears every single background noise, then you probably need to take some steps in your own workspace to counter that," she said. Try earplugs, headphones and if that fails ask to be moved.

The taboo topics

Sometimes the problem is a sensitive matter, such as your co-worker's body odour. In this case, you need to be extremely tactful — remember that most people are likely to be shocked and embarrassed when you deliver the news. Management consultants suggest asking your co-worker if you could discuss something that you realize may be difficult to hear. And then gently explain that you have noticed an odour that is distracting to you and perhaps others.

Real-life CSI not sexy

OddJobs

Diane Peters

Metronews.ca/oddjobs

Rod Spencer has mixed feelings about the TV phenom CSI. It's great in that it has inspired a whole new generation of young people to do forensic work. His classes at Humber

College in Toronto, which are part of the Police Foundations program, are full.

But the 63-year-old former police officer isn't as keen on how the show plays fast and loose with science (there's often a nugget of truth in what they do, but little more) and makes death seem glamorous. "Real life isn't like that. Seeing somebody murdered isn't sexy."

Spencer himself was drawn to police work as a young man because of his father, who was a cop in their hometown of Garson, just outside Sudbury, Ont. "He was an honourable man, I suppose I wanted to follow in his footsteps."

He moved to Toronto after high school and applied to the police force. He was accepted — the process was less competitive and stringent than today, and all you needed was good eyesight, good morals and some references — went to the Toronto Police College, and got to work.

He did a few jobs on the force, and soon became a first-class constable. As a hobby, he began doing photography. That helped him get a job in forensics.

After being hired by the crime scene team, he was sent back to college for training, then began photographing crime scenes, making moulds of shoe prints, analyzing blood spatters and doing lab work such as comparing fingerprints.

The job alternates between field and lab work. Some crime scenes, like a break and enter, take less than an hour to investigate. But a homicide can take weeks of work on the scene, and then many more following up in the lab.

Some cases end up in court, and that takes Crime Scene Investigation instructor Rod Spencer at work.

Rosanne Cash unfolds The List

New disc contains dad's 'essential country'

GRAHAM ROCKINGHAM
for Metro Canada

It's one of those priceless documents that probably belongs in the Smithsonian Institute — a hand-written list on a single sheet of legal-size paper, front and back, with the heading "100 Essential Country Songs."

It was written by Johnny Cash while on tour, back in 1973. He spent an afternoon, pencil in hand, compiling it for his 18-year-old daughter Rosanne Cash.

And what did she do with it?

She studied it carefully and then folded it up — yes, folded it, as in put a permanent crease in it — and stuck it in a box.

"I was just thinking, 'This is nice, I'm going to save it,'" Rosanne Cash told Metro in an interview. "I didn't think of it being the holy grail of documents. I certainly didn't think about that when he gave it to me at 18.

"I wasn't thinking that Johnny Cash gave me the list. I was thinking that it was dad who gave me the list. It was a personal thing, to give me an idea about who we were as musicians."

Cash may have looked at the list once or twice in the 30 years after her father wrote it. She only remembers keeping it in a box with other bits and pieces of memorabilia. It moved with her from California to Nashville and to her present home in New York.

A couple of years ago, Cash rediscovered the list while preparing for her Black Cadillac tour. It was time, she decided, to take some of the songs out of the box.

The result was her new CD, The List. It contains 12 songs off Johnny's list of essentials — Miss the Mississippi and You, Motherless Children, Sea of Heartbreak (with Bruce Springsteen), Take These Chains from my Heart, I'm Movin' On, Heartaches by the Number (with Elvis Costello), 500 Miles, Long Black Veil (with Jeff Tweedy), She's Got You, Girl From the North Country, Silver Wings (with Rufus Wainwright) and Bury Me Under the Weeping Willow.

For whatever reasons,

Cash has already started work on a followup to The List, which would contain another dozen or so of her father's choices. She says it's possible there the list, confirming I Walk the Line as one

Land Is Your Land are also list members. But it's a tease. She won't go further.

Cash does admit, however, to wishing she had asked her dad to revise it before he died.

"It is one of my great regrets in life that I didn't think to ask him to update it," she says.

When asked if anything released since 1973 that may have made an amended list, she responds with George Jones' hit He Stopped Loving Her To

Legion

Director: Scott Stewart

Stars: Paul Bettany, Dennis Quaid

Classification: STC

ADAM NAYMAN
for Metro Canada

Somebody up there has a sense of humour. How else to explain Paul Bettany starring in duelling new releases as both Charles Darwin and a badass angel bent on keeping God from destroying humanity?

Descending from the heavens into the L.A. night like Kyle Reese, Bettany's Michael is bent on making it out to the desert, to a truck stop housing a twangy Sarah Connor manqué (Adrianne Palicki). Precisely why this dust-bunny's unborn child holds the key to humanity's salvation in the face of extermination is a question never addressed in Peter Schink and director Scott Stewart's screenplay.

A few other questions: Why does God's plan to eradicate his most beloved creations include so much stalling? (The first act plays like Dawn of the Dead, with possessed citizens assaulting the compound and getting shot up by Bettany and his motley crew of human pals, including Tyrese Gibson and a hook-handed Charles S. Dutton.)

Why does Michael's winged nemesis Gabriel (Kevin Durand) stop in the middle of his Divine errand to have a fistfight? When did Dennis Quaid go from the poor man's Harrison Ford to an ornery supporting role in mid-January studio dreck?

Legion is atrociously made, but what really rangles are its thinly veiled reactionary politics (in short: armed militias, good; abortions, not so much).
